A) COMPREHENTION (07pts)

Read the text carfully and the activites below

Advertisers use specific methods to target teen consumers, but these method are not always successful or ethical. A dvertising is giving thr general public information about new goods and trying to increase sales by attracting consumers, something that is efficient for the nation's economy. However advertising alone doesn't get consumers if persuasion which is its main objective is missing. The unless you make research about the consumer's behiviour; likes and dislikes, you won't be able to convince them to purchase a product.

Therefore the most popular method is tests and surveys, both befor and after aproduct is introduced telephone surveys, written questionneres and semples, either handed out in stores or sent by mail are effectives tests to see if consumers like a product or not. All of this data collected has other purpuses, such as information on warranties and which groups to target for certain products. In this way compaines learn what consumer want consumers want befor waching money.

As teens are able to spend their money mor freely, because they do not have responsibilities of adults, they are becoming big targets for advertisers; this is due to the fact that parents give them a complete control of brand choice.

As consequence, advertisers are focusing on teenagers because of their going consumerrism.

Teens want to show their individuality by their colthes and prossessions, they like to feel good about themselves, as a result, they buy new materials to produce that feeling. To keep up whith chaning trends, teens are continuously purchasing new items whith advertisers devise specific ads to appeal to these chanchinteens.
