Corruption is a form of dishonest behavior that has a big impact on everyone. It occurs when an entrusted entity abuses its position of power for its own benefit. Corruption can come in many forms including bribes, double-dealing, embezzlement, and fraud by individuals, businesses, and governments.

The act of corruption has financial and social consequences for everyone. Corruption may further limit people's access to the education, health care, and legal services they need. It can threaten the foundations of democracy, leading people to lose trust in their leaders who may be corrupt or may take position through corrupt ways. It can also reduce economic growth and development and create bureaucracy.
